dammit...im clearing out my 100 gal soon..but it'll be a week or so.. what to do what to do..im sure this guy will get snatched up quickly....if you still have it when i have space ill take it for sure...
goodluck with the sale

so there was a bear in the forest takin a crap
along hops a rabbit
the bear says, "hello mr rabbit do you have problems with shibby sticking to your fur?"
the rabbit says, "well no ive never had that problem"
so the bear grabbed the rabbit and used him to wipe his ass.

How much does a Fly River Turtle usually cost? What is the min. tank size? What do they eat? Would they be compatible with 2 RB Pacu, Oscar, Sevs, Blood Parrots, and a Polypterus?

Apr 7 2005, 04:19 PM

sry cant help you there... but this post should be in another thread, im sure some one on here will suitable answer your questions, and welcome to ww

Dirty Evo

Apr 7 2005, 06:57 PM

I just read in another trhead that they get up to 55 lbs and like 22inch diameter.

BIG. Wish I had a tank that big... I would love to have one. Check they buy / sell... some for $150-$250

Umbriferum

Apr 7 2005, 08:33 PM

i'm going to move this to reptiles, you would probably get better answers from those who own FRTs.

Twiggy

Apr 7 2005, 08:54 PM

these are not starter turtles. Their care can be somewhat demading, as far as water quality and parameters. They basically need brackish conditions to prevent fungus.

this is one of the better care sheets out there:

Are they ever available here? Or are is there a sensible reason why I haven't seen them? All I ever hear about them is on American sites where everyone loves them.

Thanks

They are available, but not cheap, and rare. Some stores should be able to get them in for you, but your best bet is Aquarist Classifieds...

Prolly the same over there as here..i believe they are on a protected cities deal that banned the importing of them.

If you find a baby most likely is came from a farm in Hong Kong were they are doing some type of artificial insemination ☹
